

The Holdings of the Polish Archives
and
What's Been Filmed by the Family History Library

When searching for records in the Polish archives, it helps to know the names of the historical provinces. Below are the provinces from the post World War I era.

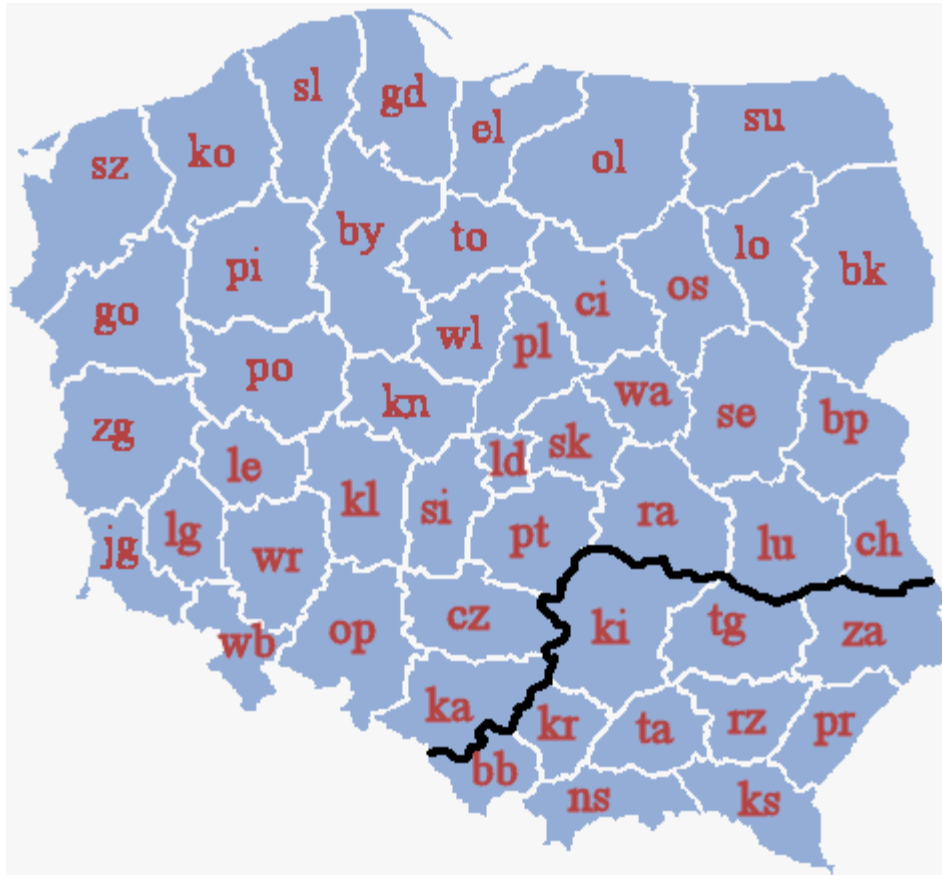

What had been Galicia became the provinces of Krakow, Lwow, Tarnopol, and Stanislawow.

At the beginning of the Second World War, Poland was again partitioned, and at the war's end, the provinces of Tarnopol, Stanislawow, and most of Lwow were kept by the Soviet Union and became part of the Ukraine. The province of Krakow and the western edge of Lwow were again integrated into Poland.

The territory of Polish Galicia that was lost to the Soviet Union is still cataloged under the old province names as stanislawowskie, tarnopolskie, and lwowskie in the Polish archives. That part of the former Galicia that returned to Polish control is cataloged under the provincial names used in 1975, shown below.

I've outlined the areas of interest in black. The new province names are: ki = kieleckie, tg = tarnobrzescie, za = zamojskie, kr = krakowskie, ta = tarnowskie, rz = rzeszowskie, pr = przemyskie, bb = bielskie, ns = nowosadeckie, and ks = krosnienskie.

The above named ten provinces, as well as the three under the old names, were checked for Lutheran (ewangelicko-augsburskie) and Reformed (ewangelicko-reformowane) church records in the Polish archives. The archive's search engine can be found here:

<http://baza.archiwa.gov.pl/sezam/pradziad.php?l=en>

The search engine allows you to search using a number of different parameters. You can search a province and a denomination to find all the Lutheran churches in lwowskie, for example. When you search by village name, you may be surprised by what you get back, for the search results display shows only the Polish name; you have to dig a bit deeper to see the non-Polish name. Königsberg, for example, displays as Królewszczyzna.

The search engine results displays five columns: village, denomination, type of records, dates, and a final column with the clickable link “more”. Clicking on the “more” will take you to a page that gives the Polish and non-Polish name, the province, the district or commune, the parish the village belonged to, and which archive holds the records.

Knowing the parish is important, because the Family History Library (FHL) catalogs their church record microfilms by parish. After getting the parish information from the Polish archives, it’s just a matter of checking each one in the FHL records to see what’s available.

Below is what I found. One major filming was done by the FHL in the early 1970’s and another was done about 2002. Between the two, most of the records available at the central archive, up into the late 1890’s and sometimes later, are now available. Where there seems to be a correspondence between the Polish archive dates and those given by the FHL, I’ve used bold face. For some records, the end dates differed, and these are noted in a separate column.

Note that most of the filming was done in the central archive in Warsaw; little has been done in the provincial archives. Some villages have their records split between the central archive and one of the provincial archives. One village of interest to me, Stadlo, is split between the central archive and the Krakow archive. Unfortunately, the records that I’m interested in are in the Krakow archive and have not been filmed.

In the tables below you’ll find village names that have no dates flagged. If the village belonged to a large parish, the chances are good that the parish records will include that village. Nothing was flagged in the table because the FHL listing did not specifically call out that village.

You will also find village names that have only the parish column filled in. These are the names of villages that the FHL entry included in the description of the records, but for which there is no separate record call out. As an example, in the parish entries for Ugartsthal, Landestreu is an included village, but has no separate records mentioned, while Engelsberg, Debelowka, and Dolina do have some sections attributed solely to them. Remember, the parish is the key to the records.

Many of the Warsaw Archive microfilms from the Family History Library have been scanned by the Archive and are now available on-line:

<http://www.agad.gov.pl/inwentarze/testy.html>

You can find a number of different religious denominations, and the scanned Lutheran and Reformed records are quite complete.
